

Forbes names Mercury Insurance one of America's best employers for the second year-in-a-row

Corporate culture, work-life balance, career opportunities, stability and management are some of the top reasons people give when searching for the right job. Mercury Insurance team members and Forbes magazine agree that we have the right combination of all the above—for the second straight year, Forbes named Mercury one of “America’s Best Midsize Employers.”

The independent survey conducted by Forbes and Statista showed that Mercury employees “would overwhelmingly” recommend the company to friends and family members. And Mercury is one of a select few property/casualty insurance companies to make the list!

“It’s an honor to be recognized by Forbes and our team members for a second consecutive year and I’m extremely proud of our entire team for making Mercury such a great place to work,” said Mercury Insurance President and CEO Gabriel Tirador. “ Our people are the cornerstone of our success and we are committed to creating an amazing employee experience. I believe we really are a family and together we will continue to make Mercury better and stronger.”

Mercury has been dedicated to providing employees with the ideal workplace since opening our doors more than 55 years ago, helping them thrive professionally and personally. We’ve recently launched a series of initiatives, including leadership training and a variety of health and wellness programs that helped earn Mercury a Limeade Limelight Award for employee engagement.

Mercury is an Equal Opportunity Employer that offers bonus opportunities, benefits, 401(k) matching and more. Learn how you can join Mercury’s team at mercuryinsurance.com/about/careers-jobs/.
